Chambers Chandelier

The Tribeca series of lamps started with a classic American road trip. Danish designer Søren Rose travelled across the US collecting lamps from the early to mid 20th century. He took his cache back to the studio in New York, dismantled and reassembled them, mixing and matching lamps as he went along. Out of this experimentation the Tribeca series was born, inspired by the glamour of New York in the late 1930s, with a decidedly industrial feel.

The Chambers Chandelier is the newest addition to the family.

About the Designer

Danish designer Søren Rose started his career as an entrepreneur and creative director – setting up one of Scandinavia’s most successful web companies, among other enterprises. In 2008, he fulfilled a life-long dream by opening a design studio in New York, and today also has an outpost in Copenhagen.

The studio famously operates a no-hierarchy rule: “If a junior designer has the best idea that’s what we go with,” Søren explains.
